It is hard to believe that the use of computer technology in the selection and procurement function is only in its infancy. In the future, technology will bring more ideas, tools, and information to hotel. And it cannot come too soon since hotel will continue to experience more competitive markets, slimmer profit margins, and a shrinking labor force. Technology will help hotels to overcome these obstacles and will ultimately contribute to the success of their business. So, this study raises the following recommendations.

1. Hotel managers and purchasing managers must develop strategic plans to support recommendations.
2. Computer technology applications strategy should specify the aims, the goals, and context of the lications these ideas should be integrated with other organizational and managerial processes.
3. Top hotel managers as well as purchasing managers must build up their competitive advantage.
4. The study recommends that purchasing managers' awareness should be increased, as they are who take the decision to adopt or reject the using of the computer technology applications on their hotels sectors.
5. The initial stages of E-business development because any discrepancy in understanding the E-business concept could pose problems.
6. The study also recommends to encourage hotels of all categories to involve and deal with computer technology providers and consultants and specialists because: It's a simple, a low cost, and an effective way to provide the hotel with the computer system application capabilities.
7. Purchasing managements need to be potentially aware of the positive effect of computer technology applications on the nature of communication, as it would be better than face to face negotiation.
8. Suppliers in E-business need to recognize the potential benefits of partnering with purchasing departments during and after the implementation process. And managers should be punished if they fight the system.
9. The study recommends that the continual cooperation between academic sector and hotels sector. This integration will be sponsored by legal part (Higher Education Ministry) which is responsible for providing guidance and staffing to hotels sector. Hotels sector will also ask for help and training by professors in academic sector.
