

Research Summary (2)

Journal of the Faculty of Arts - Cairo University (Khartoum branch)

Wadi Al-Nile for Humanitarian, Social and Educational Studies and Research

Issue (26) for the month of April 2020

Issn 2536 - 9555

Types of Persian Verbal Clause According "Taqui Wahidi"

In His Short Story Collection Entitled "JAHAR SHANABAH YA'AKHAR"

"Last Wednesday": A Semantic and A Syntactical Study.

Dr. Amani Sayed Mohamed El-Sayed

Lecturer of Persian language and its literature

Faculty of Arts - Fayoum University

Summary

In conclusion, it can be stated that the author Taqui Wahidi in his short story collection entitled "JAHAR SHANABAH YA'AKHAR" or what is known as "Last Wednesday" uses three types of verbal clauses. They are: the simple verbal clause, the complex verbal clause and the compound verbal clause. Moreover, the study defines clearly each one of the three with examples quoted from the short story collection of the author. Furthermore, the study presents examples that indicate the author's use of the simple verbal clause and the complex verbal clause in detail which are clearly shown in his prose of the short story collection. The study, also, assures the author's use of the subordinations for the basic verbal clause such as the use of adjective, emphasis, apposition and conjunction.

Regarding the compound verbal clause, the study adopts two types of the Persian verbal clause; they are: the conditional verbal clause and the relative verbal clause. Finally, the study refers to the linguistic skill of the author by using these two types of the compound verbal clauses in forming long clauses and phrases. The study also shows how fluent the author is by using the language in a way that serves his idea and conducting the desired meaning to the reader.