Pressures on people are great because they are in a race for earning their living and leading a wholesome comfortable life. Some people get tired and depressed easily. Consequently, they fall out of the race. Others struggle hard in order to achieve their goals.

For years, Manal had struggled to achieve her aim. With a poor sick husband unable to earn a living, she worked hard doing her best to maintain a big family having five children and a husband. She had to do small jobs, sewing clothes, selling handmade pieces. This helped her to get the money needed for leading a somewhat appropriate life to bring up her promising children. Besides, she had to pay for her education. Her efforts were at last crowned with a university degree and a job as a teacher.

Manal was successful. While many women like her got weary with the burden they carried, Manal was able to raise her children and to let them be well educated. She reaped the harvest of her hard work when all her five children completed their education and got their jobs.

Manal decided to start a new project. She started secondary school classes for housewives who married without completing their education. Her work with them proved a great success as the idea attracted a great number of rich women. She expanded her teaching to contain dress-making, cooking and playing music.
