

The Philosophical Roots of the Environmental crisis
Study in the Philosophy of Ecology
Khaled A. Qutb

Human, since the ancient times, tried to change the natural environment in order to dominate it. So human tried to know the secrets of nature. This trail made human fell in many mistakes towards the natural environment. This study puts forward a vision that highlights the relationship between human and the natural environment from philosophical view as a consensus and harmony relationship, not as domination relationship.

The philosophers of science in the last third of the twentieth century offered a several concepts and analysis to show the philosophical and religious reasons that led to the environmental crisis. On the other hand, they offered epistemological , methodological and ethical views to make balance between human and the natural environment.
