

Faculty of Social Work

Department of Social Work Fields

Research summary

A social work orientation program using attachment theory to support family security for children in alternative families.

Preparation

Dr. Hakima Rajab Ali Zidan

Teacher at the Faculty of Social Work

Fayoum University

Hz00@fayoum.edu.eg

Journal of the Faculty of Social Work for Studies and Social Research - Fayoum University. Issue 19, Volume 1. April 2020

Abstract

This study attempted to develop a proposed orientation program for social service using attachment theory to support family security for children in alternative families through the application of a questionnaire "Family Security" consisting of three main dimensions that represent the dimensions of family security and they are: family interaction, family upbringing, family support, those The dimensions are made up of (42) words, related to the main dimensions referred to that translate aspects of family security for the child who is catered to by the alternative family. To achieve the goals of the study, the researcher used .the quantitative and qualitative approach in the analysis

The results of the study reached a set of results, the most important of which was that there is a need to develop and implement various training and orientation programs for alternative families to support the achievement of these families for the child's family security, which is guaranteed as each age stage the child goes through needs to educate, train and qualify the family for how to deal and raise the child, and this What was taken into account during the development of the social service training program in light of Bolby's .attachment theory