

Study summary

Private schools are among the most important educational institutions in the educational system, We can say that social service and education are two sides of the same process, Both seek to care for students from a specialized angle, The social worker works in private schools alongside faculty and board members, Who practices the social work profession in school, Where these specialists are exposed to a group of factors that represent life and career pressures and a challenge to work with them, which affects their job satisfaction.

From this standpoint, the study aimed to determine the life pressures affecting the job satisfaction of social workers in private schools. Which is to determine the level of life pressure of social workers in private schools, which is represented in (Job type - Remuneration - Training and Capacity Development - Decision Making Authority) And determine the life pressures associated with the internal work environment affecting the job satisfaction of social workers in private schools, which is represented in (School Administration - Team Work - Physical Work Environment - Students) As well as determining the life pressures associated with the external work environment affecting the job satisfaction of social workers in private schools represented in (Relationship with other schools - relationship with the family - relationship with the union)

This study is considered descriptive and analytical. The researcher used the social survey method in a comprehensive survey method for all social workers in private schools, and they number (75).

The researcher used the measure of life pressure to reveal the results of the study, and the results of the study revealed the determination of the life pressures of social workers affecting their job satisfaction in private schools.

As well as life stresses associated with the internal and external work environment affecting the job satisfaction of social workers in private schools.