

Faculty of Social work

Participatory Planning as Approach to Improve Social Services in Primary Care Villages

Dr / El SayedAli Osman Ahmed

Teacher at the Department of Development and Planning
Faculty of Social work – University of fayoum

Abstract :-

The study aimed at identifying the role of participatory planning in improving social services in primary care villages, identifying the obstacles facing participatory planning in improving social services (education, health and economic) in primary care villages, identifying mechanisms for activating participatory planning in improving social services in the primary care villages ,In order to achieve the objectives of the study, the study was based on: An interview manual applied to (officials - leaders - representatives of local community groups) and included (25) phrase and a form of measurement applied to the beneficiaries of social services in the villages studied and The tool included (50) phrase adding Initial data distributed as follows: Initial data (6) question, Dimension education services (10) Phrases, Dimension health services (10) Phrases, Dimension economic education services (10) Phrases, Dimension constraints (10) Phrases, Dimension mechanisms for activating participatory planning (10) Phrases, The study was based on a sample of (15) individual participants in the village development planning projects and (111) individual representing the beneficiaries of the projects of the three components of educational, health and economic component in the village under study ,The study reached several results: The study showed a number of contributions of participatory planning in improving the educational services in primary care villages. The most important of these are the following: Suggest solutions to educational problems - Identify educational needs - Raise funds - Discuss officials in educational decisions ,The results showed a number of contributions to participatory planning in improving health services, namely: development of health services - the interest of officials in identifying the views of the people - identifying available alternatives - meeting the health services needs ,The study showed a number of contributions to participatory planning in improving economic services, including: Holding training courses, providing technical advice, implementing improvement programs, identifying priority projects. The study also revealed a number of obstacles and mechanisms to activate participatory planning in improving social services in primary care villages.

- Keywords: participatory planning - social services - primary care villages.