

The role of social care institutions in achieving social security for the elderly

Research Summary;

The aim of the research is to know the role of social care in achieving social safety for elderly residents. At this stage, the elderly suffer from many problems, whether living, health, or psychological. Therefore, the study tried to know the role of the nursing home in confronting these problems that the elderly suffer from, in addition to how to achieve safety for them. Accordingly, a questionnaire form was applied to both workers and residents of the nursing home at the Center for Hosting the Elderly of the Resala Association, as well as the workers of the Badr Islamic Complex of the Abu Bakr Al-Siddiq Association. The title of the form was "The effectiveness of social care institutions in achieving social safety for the elderly," consisting of three sub-dimensions. They are: the role of social care institutions in achieving living security for the elderly - the role of social care institutions in achieving health security for the elderly - the role of social care institutions in achieving emotional security for the elderly. These dimensions consist of (35) statements. To achieve the objectives of the study, the researcher used the quantitative and qualitative approach in analyzing and interpreting the research results. The research reached a set of results, the most prominent of which was the existence of an effective role for social care institutions in achieving emotional and health security for the elderly
