Abstract:

The topic of this research includes an approach to helping students innovate by opening new horizons for them to experiment. Where the research tends to the idea of analogy (similarity), as for the consumables, such as foam molds used in electrical appliances cartons, or food containers used in restaurants ...etc. or the creation of formal formulations from the usual templates or models by changing its shape. Where it is possible through the appropriate use of the previous updated templates and low easy it is to use them. Which is similar to how to deal with the formation technique using a template or model, and the usual for students as a formation technique is that they can find a new entrance
